Double Patenting

A rejection based on double patenting of the "same invention" type finds its support in the language of 35 U.S.C. 101 which states that "whoever invents or discovers any new and useful process ... may obtain a patent therefor ..." (Emphasis added). Thus, the term "same invention," in this context, means an invention drawn to identical subject matter. See Miller v. Eagle Mfg. Co., 151 U.S. 186 (1894); In re Ockert, 245 F.2d 467, 114 USPQ 330 (CCPA 1957); and In re Vogel, 422 F.2d 438, 164 USPQ 619 (CCPA 1970).

A statutory type (35 U.S.C. 101) double patenting rejection can be overcome by canceling or amending the conflicting claims so they are no longer coextensive in scope. The filing of a terminal disclaimer cannot overcome a double patenting rejection based upon 35 U.S.C. 101.

Claims 1 and 2 are rejected under 35 U.S.C. 101 as claiming the same invention as that of claims 1 and 2 of prior U.S. Patent No. 6660387. This is a double patenting rejection.

Brown et al., U.S. Patent # 6,172,457 is, in the Examiner's view, the most relevant prior art document. They surmise in column 4, lines 39-43 that Applicant's approach to strengthening the glass used in the manufacture of flat panel displays by introducing a compressive strain therein is well known and, hence, an obvious solution. However, whereas Applicant employs an epoxy resin or an inorganic-organic hybrid polymer as an intermediate layer, Brown exploits a composition comprised of various ceramic materials (see table in column 5). Just as Brown maintains that it is the utilization of this ceramic composition that represents the unobvious aspect of their invention, it can be stated that Applicant's use of rigid epoxy resins and organic-inorganic hybrid polymers derived therefrom, is also unobvious. (Brown does not identify what other materials have been used in this capacity nor could the Examiner find any references teaching the placement of a rigid polymer between two glass sheets so as to convey a compressive strain.)
